It is common for all of us to feel stressed from time to time. During uncertain times we may experience stress more often. Caregiving is a rewarding and demanding profession. It is important for you to practice self-care and identify effective ways to take time to care for yourself every day.

Tell yourself that "Self-Care Isn’t Selfish!"
- Deep breathing is a valuable tool for calming the nervous system.
- Practice self-compassion. Pay attention to your inner voice and ask, “would I say this to my best friend”? If the answer is no, then give yourself some kindness, patience, and understanding.
- Do something that you enjoy! Some examples include taking a bath, going for a walk, journaling, or something else that you find soothing.
- Practice self-care every day! You can’t pour from an empty cup.
- Take care of your health! Eat nutritious food, get quality sleep, and stay physically active.

Notice Your Feelings.
- Reflect on your feelings, thoughts, and attitudes. Have you been short with others? Do you feel like yourself? All emotions are okay!
- Make an effort to slow down and check in with how you’re feeling.
- Notice what events or things cause you more stress. When you feel overwhelmed identify a way to help you cope. State feelings in clear ways and practice stress reduction techniques: deep breathing, muscle relaxation, slowly drinking a glass of water.

Seek Connection.
- We may not always be able to connect face-to-face. Find creative ways to reach out for support from friends and family (i.e. phone, email, or even write a letter).
- Take time to connect with nature. Go outside for a walk or sit outside for a few moments.
- Write a note or send a text message to tell someone you haven’t seen in awhile something nice.
- Stay spiritually grounded. This may include mindfulness and/or prayer.

Practice Gratitude.
- Make a list of 5 things that make you feel grateful.
- Keep a daily gratitude journal.
- Share one thing from the day that was challenging and what you learned during family dinnertime.
